We hereby declare that all BCS Ultra brand products comply with the NDAA directive.

The National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) is a federal law of the United States that came into effect on August 13, 2018. In this law, section 889 prohibits the use of components related to visual surveillance systems and telecommunications services from certain manufacturers deemed to pose a national security risk. This means that federal agencies, public sector institutions, and private sector entities are prohibited from using these products for security reasons.

None of the BCS Ultra products contain parts from the manufacturers specified in section 889 of the NDAA.
